The following information about the Center for Biological Diversity and Attorney Fink is reprinted from the Center's website.

At the Center for Biological Diversity, we believe that the welfare of human beings is deeply linked to nature — to the existence in our world of a vast diversity of wild animals and plants. Because diversity has intrinsic value, and because its loss impoverishes society, we work to secure a future for all species, great and small, hovering on the brink of extinction. We do so through science, law and creative media, with a focus on protecting the lands, waters and climate that species need to survive. We want those who come after us to inherit a world where the wild is still alive.

Marc Fink, Senior Attorney, Public Lands Forests Director, oversees the Center's efforts to protect public lands forests, including the 193-million-acre national forest system. Marc graduated in 1995 from Lewis and Clark Law School with a certificate in environmental and natural resources law and has extensive experience litigating cases to enforce environmental laws and protect forests and wildlife. Before working for the Center, Marc worked as a staff attorney with the Western Environmental Law Center and with Forest Service Employees for Environmental Ethics.
