The following biography is reprinted from Attorney Saul's website.

Jamie Saul is a public interest environmental attorney. Prior to opening his own practice in the Spring of 2010, he worked for 2 1/2 years as a Staff Attorney for Midwest Environmental Advocates, Wisconsin's first and only nonprofit environmental law center. He is a 2007 graduate of Lewis & Clark Law School in Portland, Oregon, where he graduated cum laude with a Certificate in Environmental Law. While in law school Jamie worked with some of the most effective environmental law organizations in the country, including the Pacific Environmental Advocacy Center, the Northwest Environmental Defense Center, and the Seattle office of Earthjustice.

Jamie specializes in environmental, land use, and natural resource protection law, and has experience in litigation, administrative advocacy, and policy development under federal environmental statutes including the Clean Water Act, Clean Air Act, Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, and National Environmental Policy Act. He also has experience with related state laws and environmental programs such as WPDES and Chapter 30 permits, the Livestock Facilities Siting Law, and air pollution permitting.

Jamie lives in Madison with his wife Alex DeLucenay, and in his spare time enjoys canoeing, backpacking, skiing, cycling, and running.
